the difference to the normal civic type r to the champ edition

Historically reserved for very special Honda models with a sporting heritage, the Championship White shade first featured on the Japanese manufacturer's 1963 F1 car. Since then it's appeared on 'R' editions of the NSX, Integra and Accord in specific markets.

The addition of a limited slip differential, which ensures the power is sent in equal measure to both front wheels when applied with vigour, means the special Type R is certainly worthy of the prestigious paint shade. Nearly a second and a half was shaved from the car's lap times at Honda's test circuit in Japan, translating into greater road and track performance.

With the exception of the LSD and exterior revisions, which include new alloy wheels and a smoked effect for the door handles and fuel cap among other areas, the Championship White edition is much the same as the regular Type R. That means it benefits from the same practical but shapely body and
